Fleek is good to go either way; if we meet on Friday, FEMA will propose the vague series of open houses where they cannot get nailed on the issues, so we might want to consider a forum or two where they are tied into being forced to give answers that can be recorded: such as "we are confident and right" and "you have to appeal and you are screwed anyway"

So what is the consensus, to meet or wait until after the 20th?

That was kind of my idea, and I think Lorna's as well. We might as well get a few things out of the way now.

I had assumed that we wouldn't be meeting, however perhaps we could try to discuss the public roll out and the need for additional review time before the 30 day clock gets started.

All,

As a result of FEMA's recall of the flood maps, there may not be a great need to have this scheduled meeting on Friday. On the other hand, John Graves is going to be up here that morning anyway and is very willing to meet as planned. What's your collective pleasure? I told John I would email him one way or another.
